

6 Work-At-Home Moms Share How They Made it Happen

Posted on December 18, 2012

by Jen Austin

✓ Like

11

+1

0

Tweet

5

Share

Pin it

The Interior Designer

Debbie Wiener began working from home after discovering how difficult it was to find a job that was flexible with her kids' schedules, vacation, sick days, etc.

"You would think women-owned businesses would be a bit more progressive with working moms, but I found they were the worst," Wiener said.

So Wiener began working from home out of her unfinished basement designing pet-friendly and family-friendly home solutions. She's been working from home for 18 years now and has published the top-selling book, "Slobproof!: Real-Life Design Solutions." Wiener has a full team who works for her and has been featured in the LA Times, USA Today and The Washington Post. "We still work out of my home basement, but now it's furnished! I still cook a pretty good dinner most nights, do the laundry and walk the dog. Better yet, I am now writing a book to help other women start their own business. I am all about bringing home the bacon, and frying it up," she said.